God's Providence House is one of the most beautiful specimens of half-timbered houses in Chester, this being a style of architecture in which the city is particularly rich. It is situated in Watergate Street, and bears on a beam the inscription "God's Providence is Mine Inheritance, 1652," this motto being placed there to record the fact that the inhabitants of this house were among the few survivors when the city was devastated by a plague. The building has been recently restored.
